U.S. Chief Justice Tells African Audience : 'World Law Is Needed'

Addis Ababa, (Ethiopia) — U.S. Chief Justice Earl Warren told a capacity audience in the Haile Selassie I Theatre here that men, for their own salvation, must learn to employ law, not arms, to settle the world's differences.

"When we consider the danger of international friction to day, it is as important for us to devote our great effort toward having a body of international law as it is to make improvement in our domestic law," Mr. Warren said.

More than 1,200 persons heard Mr. Warren speak Monday night at the occasion sponsored by the Haile Selassie I University. It was the highlight of the three-day visit to Ethiopia of the Chief Justice and Mrs. Warren.

World Law

Speaking on the topic WORLD RULE OF LAW, Justice Warren told his audience that he had just come from a world conference of lawyers in Athens, Greece, where lawyers from 105 countries were in attendance. They were prompted he said, by their belief that the greatest need of the world today is a world rule of law.

"One of the things we are learning is that there must be a better way than war to resolve the differences between nations," said Mr. Warren. He pointed out as evidence of that fact the Organization of America States, the Common Market, and 'The concept of African unity' which was reached at the recent African Summit Conference here.

"All of these advances have been premised on law, and nations must continue to rely more and more on law," Mr. Warren declared.

Justice Warren paid tribute to emerging Africa. He said: "I am fortunate to be here at a time when this great section of the world has aroused itself from the isolation of centuries and has drawn aside the veil that has shielded it for so long from the eyes of the outside world."

He said it was exciting to witness nation after nation emerge from centuries of colonialism to full independence and to their rightful place in the family of nations.

Nigerian Blind Teacher Will Return With Own Guide Dog

LONDON—A blind Nigerian school teacher plans to return home from England next year led by his own guide dog.

Mr. Philip Udofia of Ikot Inyanku Eti went blind in 1957. He was already a school teacher and subsequently came to Britain to train to equip himself to return to teaching in a blind school in Lagos.

"Guide dogs give a blind person independence because he is not always able to find another person to take him about," Mr. Udofia explained. "With a dog he can go anywhere he likes, even in the busiest cities, because the dogs are trained to guide and take care of you."

Mr. Udofia is now studying at a blind school in Bristol, south west England. Children at the school play a full programme of games, including football, cricket, swimming and table tennis, despite their handicap. They also learn such trades as basket making, mat making, domestic science, music and piano tuning.

Hostel For Married Overseas Couples

LONDON—The Zebra House Council has just opened its second hostel for overseas married students in Camden Town, London. The hostel, which has been named Impala House, consists of two houses divided into eleven flats.

The Zebra House Council is a voluntary body which has dedicated itself to accommodating all races in friendship together. Already families from Nigeria, Uganda, Tanganyika, Kenya, India and Sudan are sharing the home.

A spokesman of the Council told our correspondent that when the Zebra House hostel for unmarried overseas students is fully completed in about two months time, there will be accommodation for thirty-six students.
