Govt. Warns On Outside Savings

'Sell All Your Foreign Currency To Banks Here'

ACCRA—The Government has reminded Ghanaians that they should sell any foreign currency they possess to a bank in Ghana, a statement issued by the Ministry of Finance said here today.

The statement warned that Ghanaian holding funds outside the country were contravening the Exchange control Act, 1961.

It said: "In a recent comment in a local newspaper it was alleged that an ex-Minister was maintaining foreing banking accounts.

"From the comment, it may be inferred that there is at present no obligation for residents of Ghana to surrender any foreign funds they have in exchange for Ghana pounds until called upon to do so by the exchange Control authorities. This is not correct."

Obligation

The relative obligation imposed on residents of Ghana by the Exchange Control Act. 1961, was that in the absence of any exemption, they must sell any foreing currency they possessed to a bank in Ghana."

It said that for the time being, Ghana residents who were not Ghanainian nationals were exempted administratively from this obligation but any Ghanaian national who was holding funds outside Ghana was contravening the act.

"Furthermore, amongst other obligations imposed under the act, every Ghanaian national must have any foreign securities he owns held by a bank in Ghana.

Penalties

"Any such person owing foreign securities which are not held by a bank in Ghana is contravening the act.

"There is, therefore no question of being "called upon" to fulfil those obligations; they are specified within the Act itself and the penalties for not complying with them are severe" the statement added.

BBC Discuss Psychology, Superstition And Luck

LONDON-Foretelling the future by the movement of birds is an ancient practice that the Romans believed in so implicitly that special priests, called "augurs," were appointed for this purpose and no action was ever taken without their advice. Superstitions like this are still in force today all over the world; in some parts of East Africa, for instance, great importance is still attached to the flight of birds, while in West Africa some people think that it is unlucky to rest a hand on the ground when eating.

In Europe there are many superstitions - 13 is an unlucky number, a black cat is lucky and it is thought to be asking for trouble to walk under a ladder.

Students of superstition find that psychology plays a great part in it and this forms the main talking-point of the BBC programme AFRICAN FORUM on Wednesday, June 20.

"Psychology, Superstition and Luck" is the the title of Wednesdays AFRICAN FORUM, which will be broadcast from the city of Leeds in the North of England at 11.00 GMT on 16.84 and 13.88 metres.

The guest speaker will be John Cohen, Ph. D., Professor of Psychology at the University of Manchester. During a very full career Professor Cohen has been a member of the Inter-professional Advisory Committee to the world Federation for Mental Health and a Consultant to UNESCO. He takes particular interest in African superstitions and says that he is looking forward to being questioned on such matters by the African students who are in Leeds. The Chair will be taken by the Ghanian barrister, W. C. Ekow Daniels.
