Shakespeare After 400 Years

LONDON — Today (April 23rd) is ST GEORGE'S DAY, and it will be observed as 400 th aniversary of William Shakespeare's birthday a new Shakespeare Centre will be opened at his birthplace at Stratford-upon Avon.

Shakes' Workshop

Modern in design, but harmonising with its surroudings the Centre will provide acommodation for the Shakepeare Birthplace Trust, and for the books manuscripits records and other material, which the Trust has accumulated since it was set up in 1847. The Centre will comprise a library, combining the collections of tha Birthplace Trust and the Royal Shakespeare Theatre at Stratford, a reading room for reseacrh, and provision for lectures and exhibition.

Transfer to the new home should be comleted early in the New Year. Thus a well - equipped Shakespeare and workshop will, in the new Centre be brought together in one place, working in close co-operation with the Royal Shakespeare Theatre, the Shakespeare Institute, the British Council, and with universities and scheols boths in England and overseas.

World-Wide Appreciation

Director of the Centre and of the 1964 Shakespeare Anuiversary Council is Mr. Levi Fox, who has been directing the work of the Shakespeare Birthplace Trust for some years. Mr Fox says that appreciation of Shakespeare is not just a sentimental feeling about the poet and his work, nor is it merely local. It has grown enormously and at many levels, since the tercentaudry celebrations in 1864, from playgoers and children to scholars all over the world; For example, in Latin a translation of the poet's works in six volumes is being prepared to mark the 400 anniversary of his birth.

A quarter of a million visitors visit Shakespeares birthplace every year, more than half of them from overseas.

The Quatercentenary Festival at Straford-upon-Avon opens on April 23 1964, and will be diveded into highlight periods with in each of which there will be a mixed bill of fare of commemorative activitiss. An exhibition will illustate the life and career of Shakespeare against the background of his time.

Medical Museum Techniques

LONDON— Preparing parts of the human body for display in medical museums may sound a grim art but it is an important aid to medical science and a direct help in training doctors.

Studying this art in Britain is Mr. R. I. Okpa of Lagos University, who will spend six months at the Royal College of Surgeons' Museum in London.

"This Museum is probably the best in the world. There is nothing elsewhere to compare with it and people from medical school all over the globe are constantly visiting it for advice," he said to our Correspondent in an interview conducted amidst many exhibits of preserved human organs.

Mr. Okpa, who is Tutor Presector of Anatomy at the Lagos University Medical School, hopes to help in setting a full scale medical museum when he returns home.

Nigeria to Join Parade at Dartmouth Centenary

LONDON—Nigeria will be represented in force at the Centenary Ceremony of the Royal Naval College at Dartmouth tomorrow, Sunday.

In the march past of saillors and officers from Britain and nine overseas countries will be fourteen cadets and three sub-lieutenants from Nigeria.

Many thousands of cadets from every Commonwealth country and of many nationalities have passed through the Dartmouth College in southern England.

British Education Lecturer to Tour Nigeria

LONDON—Mr A E G Pilliner, Lecturer in Experimental Education at the University of Edinburgh, is spending two weeks in Nigeria at the request of the West African Examination Council. Mr. Pilliner's tour has been arranged by the British Council.

He will visit Port Harcourt, Enugu, Ibadan, Kaduna and Lagos and will address groups of principals of schools, secondary schools teachers and examiners of the West African Examinations Council on the testing of attainment in English, arithmetic and other subjects included in examinations at School Certificate level.

Since 1949, Mr Pilliner has been responsible for research at the University of Edinburgh into the construction of Moray House tests, including 11x tests used extensively in Britain by education autheorities in selecting children for secondary courses at the end of their primary school education. He is also responsible for courses in experimental education given to graduate students reading for the Diploma in Education, the honours degree of Bachelor of Education and for Ph D student working in the field.

While in Lagos, Mr. Pilliner will conduct a course of instruction for a selected group of examiners of the West African Examinations Council.

An expert of wide international experinence, Mr. Pilliner has contributed extensively to the Journal of Educational Psychology and has worked as U.N.E.S.C.O. expert in Israel concentrating on the difficulties of educating children in a community with diverse cultural background and with the teaching of English as a second language

Mr Pilliner leaves Nigeria for Accra on December 2 to carry our a similar programme of instruction.
